

Emotional Literacy for Administrators K-12

Thousands of educators have learned about Emotional Literacy and the work of Dr. Marc Brackett at Yale University. Emotional Literacy is a powerful concept that gives educators new tools to improve both academics and behavior.

This fascinating session highlights the research done by Dr. Marc Brackett at Yale University on Emotional Literacy. This work has been extensively researched and the implication is clear - children who understand and effectively handle their emotions perform better in school. Dr. Brackett's unique approach to this topic is easy to apply in school settings and has been used in hundreds of schools in the United States and around the world.

This workshop emphasizes the impact emotions have on individuals, teams, and organizations, and helps administrators learn how to harness the wisdom of emotions to become more effective leaders.

Participants can expect to learn:

1. How emotions affect all areas of our behavior and performance
2. How to educate other staff about handling emotions effectively
3. About compelling research on emotional literacy and academic performance
4. How to help students manage their emotions
5. How to apply these concepts both in a single classroom and school-wide

Marc Brackett, Ph.D., is a Research Scientist in the Department of Psychology at Yale University. He also is the Deputy Director of Yale's Health, Emotion, and Behavior Laboratory and Head of the Emotional Intelligence Unit in the Edward Zigler Center in Child Development and Social Policy.

Dr. Brackett is the author, co-author, or editor of more than 60 scholarly publications, including six social and emotional learning curricula for students, teachers, and school leaders.

His current research focuses on measuring emotional intelligence and its links to important life outcomes, including relationship quality, mental health, and academic/work performance.
